

TITLE INSURANCE FAQ

1. What is Title Insurance?

Title insurance is a great way to protect your commercial real estate investment*. Title insurance helps safeguard you against potential losses resulting from legal challenges related to property ownership and/or use.

While title insurance has traditionally been underutilised in Australia and New Zealand compared to its adoption in other countries, its valuable benefits are now gaining the recognition they deserve.

Cover includes risks relating to ownership disputes, title defects, fraud and forgery, boundary disputes, solvency or authority matters affecting a seller, illegal building works, certain planning or building permit issues and various other matters affecting ownership and/or use.

 Please refer to questions 5 and 6 below, where we explain the various applications of title insurance, depending on the transaction structure.*

2. What limits are available?

Up to USD 150 m of cover is available per asset/ transaction. However, if the deal relates to a portfolio of assets, higher overall limits can be provided, subject to specified sub-limits.

3. Does the policy only protect buyers?

Traditionally, title insurance has been taken out by a buyer, helping to ensure the security of their financial investment when acquiring a property. However, this bespoke insurance policy can be tailored to suit your needs and coverage can be expanded to protect others that have an interest in the subject property, such as your financiers or tenants.

Title insurance isn't just about buyers though. Sellers can harness its potential. A sell-side policy can protect a seller after the ink dries. It's a safety net that can help shield a seller from post-transaction liabilities, facilitating a clean exit and also reducing (or altogether removing) the need for escrow arrangements or indemnities.

4. Can you explain a bit more about the different policy forms available?

Our policies provide cover in two ways. First, our policies contain a list of insured events which will respond to matters that existed at completion, but which were not discovered during the due diligence/pre-acquisition phase. Second, a seller may disclose, or a buyer may identify a specific risk or issue.

You can purchase a policy covering:

- only the unknown matters;
- only the identified risk(s) (known as “specific risk coverage”); or
- both unknown matters and specific risks.

5. Can you only insure property/asset sales?

No. Our title insurance offerings can be used in a multitude of ways, depending on the transaction structure. We can insure:

- Direct Real Estate Transactions: Under this structure, our Real Estate Ownership Coverage will help to provide the peace of mind you seek in respect of key risks affecting title to, and use of, real estate.
- Indirect Transfers: This innovative solution comes into play when real estate is transacted through the sale of securities in a property owning company or trust. The policy will safeguard fundamental aspects of the transaction, including legal challenges affecting title to the shares and/or units transacted. Under this policy form, you get the benefit of our innovative “Securities Ownership Coverage”, in addition to the “Real Estate Ownership Coverage”.

Irrespective of the transaction structure, the ability to cover identified risks remains available.

6. What if I am purchasing a company or unit trust that doesn't own real estate?

We can still provide cover. Under this structure, you will be protected by our Securities Ownership Coverage on a standalone basis, helping to provide peace of mind regarding risks affecting title to the shares or units acquired.

7. What type of known risks/specific risks can you cover?

The list of risks we can cover is not definitive. If the risk relates to ownership of shares in a company (or comparable securities) or if it relates to the ownership or use of real estate, we can consider the risk.

Please see Annexures A and B for a list of common risks we insure.

8. How much does it cost?

Pricing for the unknown matters style policy typically falls between a pricing range of .15% and .5% of the overall asset/enterprise value.

As cover for known risks requires bespoke underwriting, pricing for such risks is assessed on a case-by-basis. However, if the risk is graded low, pricing will typically fall within a similar pricing range to that outlined above.
